“ A memory is impossible to choose; a lifetime of memories exist. what i think of most these difficult days is each and every day, i open my eyes and once again must focus that he's not here. i have caught myself calling his name - the love he showed me, i would give back in a moment if only he had given himself the caring that he gave to me. Bobby would quench my thirst, he would feed my hunger: bobby would massage and calm the pain wherever it was. Every day I relive my self centered needs, not being a better brother and kick him in his rear end and pull him by his hair and forcing the help he needed. Even that, in a less forcefull way...the hospital wouldnt listen. i thank God for the last year i was able to argue, laugh and cry with him. this last year, the entire year is the memory i'll replay and be certain that his pain is at an end. I love you Bobby, Jessica, and Tee whom ive yet to meet...you are family to us. lets make sure we behave such, rather than allow time again to seperate us. Namaste'
